not come into touch with the student body, and therefore knows scarcely any more about the type of men he will have to coach than if he were a perfect stranger.

He has roughly outlined his plans, however. He will have complete personal jurisdiction over the entire coaching system, but he will have a staff of urawn from old Coin the university who have played 'varcity football at other colleges.

Inasmuch as freshman will be barred from the 'varsity eleven, there will be a freshman coach, who will take the first year men and pilot them through a schedule of their own. This freshman coach will work in harmony with Metcalfe, but the 'varsity coach that probably would have had little difficulty in winning the championship next year.

Quinby never played professional arnietic committee show that the men from whom the team will be drawn are light, as a general rule. Hence Metcalfe will coach a style of game best suited to light players. By delving into the football coaching systems in vogue at Oberlin one soon finds that it is indebted to Har-vard for its fundamentals. These were imparted to the Oberlin players by Harvey Synder. Snyder left Oberlin in 1910, and since then Oberlin has evolved a modified system of play that has been highly successful. Metcalfe is a product of this modified Harvard Metcalfe is a firm believer in the scheme of athletic control, whereby the coach is directly amenable to the university authorities, and all his football as player and coach has been directed by a man who was a faculty officer. It is an advantage, he thinks, rather than a handicap to have the coach responsible in this way to the university, for it gives him better control over the players.

There will be five weeks of practice between the first call for candi-tice between the first call for candidates and the opening game, and although Metcalfe will be obliged to begin at the very bottom, with no foundation whatever upon which to work, he believes he will be able to put a representative eleven on the field. The opening practice session will be held on September 27, and the first game will be on October 23. In this time a team will have to be moulded from material which has never played college football.

Naturally, under these conditions Metcalfe does not desire to be pitted against teams of more than ordinary ability in his first year. It is probable that games will be scheduled with Stevens Institute, St. Lawrence University, New York University and Wesleyan. The Wesleyan game will be played on Thanksgiving Day and will bring Metcalfe against Edgar Fauver, combined with the discontent arising from the other causes, brought him resents the new idea in college athelic directors. He is a trained football coach and director of physical exercise, and he was taught his football in a school that for the last decade has been a progressive among progressives. At least, that is what one gathered from him in an hour's conversation in the Thompson Gymnasium, at Columbia University, where he is spending the summer teaching physical training and directing a class in football coaching.

Metcalfe is a young man, not yet past his twenty-fifth birthday, and he is mild mannered to an extent that affords a striking contrast to the usual mental picture of a football coach, His ideas concerning football are not mild mannered, however, and the kind of football that Columbia will play next fall will be the fast, aggresive style of play that has marked the Western type of game since the new rules have been in vogue.
